388. Norman Spear

389. That said, I think there's a potential slight shimmer of hope in the example of South Africa & lessons we can learn to achieve a positive outcome. I'm only trying to point out that pinning hopes on the masses isn't a sound strategy.

390.

391. For example I wouldn't classify Suidlanders as a mass movement yet they seem to have a good plan that might help Whites.

392. If we strive to build similar infrastructure but scaled down to our needs as we've discussed, i think that's a step in the right direction.

393. Essentially establish as many bases safehouses, and caches as possible throughout North America. These will be helpful for any future scenario.

394. That's really the bare minimum we should be doing.

395. These will be our future FOBs and network infrastructure to support not only our survival but also any potential direct action in the future hypothetically.

396. I can't imagine any future scenario in which these assets will not be necessary.

397. In this regard, the masses should be an afterthought. Ideally, as they continue to go at each other's throats we'll be preparing & looking for opportunities to accelerate.

398. And if sudden collapse does occur, we'll be in a position to take full advantage of it. So this groundwork is useful in slow collapse sudden collapse, and even no collapse really.

399. I think it's doable because it can easily be scaled and is effective at any scale to some degree. Many of us have realized the necessity of these preparations a while back either as lone individuals or as one among others in organizations which share that conclusion. The more we can cooperate to build, the better off we'll all be.

400. doomsayeth

401. Yeah, I get blackpilled by all the bullshit sometimes. But you're right, the more time we have in this semi normal state, the more time we have to prepare for what's coming.
